CHAPTER VI.

NIGHT-HAWK.

In the course of the next four-and-twenty hours the two detectives whom the inspector had sent out to search the pawnshops brought in their report.

It included a list of about a dozen articles which had been pledged since the day preceding the murder of Louis Hanier. It was a miscellaneous list: watches, rings, a gold-headed cane, two enamelled snuff-boxes, and two revolvers. One of the latter was of the calibre of 38, the other two were both 32; and either of them, therefore, would fit the bullet by which Hanier died. It was fair to infer that one or other of them was the weapon the inspector was in search of.

Along in his room he studied the descriptions carefully, and transcribed them in his private note-book:

"One Smith and Wesson revolver, 32-calibre, five chambers, long barrel, white handle, nickel plated. Pawned by—Evans, No. 310, West Thirty-fourth-street.

"One French self-cocking revolver, 32-calibre, five chambers, ebony handle, nickel plated. Pawned by—Edward McBride, Bowery and Sixth-street."

Such was the information. The next thing to be done was to hunt up Messrs. Evans and Edward McBride. One or both of these names might be assumed, and the addresses false; or, again, they might be correct and the owners might be able satisfactorily to account for themselves. The chance that the real culprit had given his real name and place of residence was an off-chance; the odds were against it. And what then? Why, then Louis Hanier's murder might remain a mystery for ever. But a poor chance was better than none, and the inspector was not the man to neglect it. He summoned one of his men and dispatched him with instructions to verify, if possible, the two names and addresses.

The detective speedily fulfilled his mission, and returned with the following report:

"No trace can be found of the person calling himself Evans. He pawned the weapon on the morning of December 31, about eleven o'clock. No accurate description of his appearance was given, except that he was a dumpish man, roughly dressed. Nothing was known of any person of the name of Evans at 310, West Thirty-fourth-street.

"Edward McBride is known. The address, Bowery and Sixth-street, is an east-side hotel. McBride does not live there, but some frequenters of the bar there were acquainted with the man. They stated that he drove a hack and could be found almost any night on Broadway. Upon this information inquiries were made at various livery-stables. Edward McBride was not employed at any of them, but it was learned that a man of that name occasionally hired a hack and patrolled the streets in search of belated passengers. Such irregular hack-drivers are called night-hawks. McBride's actual residence not known."

The inspector did not need to be told what a "night-hawk" was. They are a familiar feature of the night-side of New York, as of other great cities. As a rule, they are a jovial and convivial class of fellows, at odds with fortune and incapable of amassing property, but subject to occasional attacks of energy. They possess an extensive knowledge of the shady side of metropolitan life, acquired by scores of odd experiences: they are sharp and ready of wit, and prepared at any time to make a dollar by means that would not always be mentioned in polite society. Often they are well paid by their patrons in consideration of undertaking to lose their memories. Upon the whole, the class does not bear a particularly fragrant reputation.

Not a few of them are unscrupulous scamps, with a keen eye for plunder and a proper contempt for any of the customer who has put an enemy in his mouth to steal away his brains. And some there are who habitually associate with thieves and outlaws of every description, and become active agents in crimes which could scarcely be carried out without their assistance.

"So Edward McBride is a night-hawk, is he?" mused the inspector to himself. "That is a character not unlikely to be mixed up with just such people as I am looking for. It will be worth taking a good deal of trouble to find him."

It was a wet and murky night; but it is in just such weather that the night-hawk finds it most profitable to be abroad. Accordingly the inspector, in a waterproof overcoat and accompanied by a single attendant, issued from the Central Office and strolled up Broadway. In spite of the inclement skies the theatres were well filled—it was the heart of the ball season and the people were in holiday humour. Occasionally an empty hack would pass loiteringly along the street, and the inspector would beckon to the drivers of those hacks and exhibit them to a brief interrogation. Nothing resulted from this until Grace Church was reached, when a hackman, in answer to the question whether his name was McBride, answered, "I ain't McBride, but I know where you can find him."

"Where is that?"

"I just come down from Union-square, sir, and left him there on the stand."

"Very well. Drive me up there and point him out."

The man turned his horse and brought him up to the curb. The inspector and his companion got in, and in a few minutes were trundling slowly up through the square. Presently the hack stopped, and the driver spoke through the window:

"Do you see that carriage there with a white horse next the lamp-post?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's McBride's; and that's him smoking a pipe alongside of it."

The cab was dismissed and the inspector approached the proprietor of the white horse, who removed his pipe from his mouth and exclaimed with professional promptitude:

"Hack, sir?"

"No, my man. I want a word with you."

As he spoke, the inspector placed himself under the gas lamp, so that the cabman, standing in front of him, was fully revealed by the light. He was a short, heavily-built fellow, with a fleshy face twinkling grey eyes, and a mouth of enormous width. His aspect and bearing announced a frank and heedless good-humour, and his voice, when he spoke, in answer to the question whether he was Edward McBride, had the moist hoarseness of a fog-horn.

"That's what they call me," said he.

The inspector knew the value of a straight question delivered before your interlocutor is prepared for it. So, without further preface, he said:

"You pawned a revolver last week!"

McBride betrayed no symptoms either of surprise or embarrassment.

"Faith, and so I did, sir," he replied readily.

"Where did you get it?"

The man glanced sharply at the inspector for a moment, and then broke into a broad laugh, swinging his arms and stamping his feet. "'Tis an odd bit of a story, that," he said, recovering his gravity. "The way it happened was this: I couldn't give you just the day, but it would be somethin' like a couple of nights before New Year's. I'd struck no trade for an hour past, and was about gettin' back to stables, when there was a couple hailed me—a man and a woman."

"What time was this?"

"Well, it wouldn't be far from midnight, one way or t'other."

"What place?"

The man scratched his head under his dingy cloth cap. "I couldn't be sure to the yard," he said; "but 'twas on Fif'-avenoo, and 'I'd just passed Stewart's house on the way down."

"A clear, cold night, was it?"

"That it was not, sir. 'Twas a night like this, only worse, and the wind blowin all ways to once. So I draws up, and in the two gets, and says I, 'Where to?' and the man he says, 'Drive down Twenty-sixth-street past Sixth-avenoo,' says he, 'and I'll tell you where to stop,' he says."

"Twenty-sixth-street, between Sixth and Seventh?" repeated the inspector, not a little surprised at this unexpected turn. "Well, go on."

"Well, I takes the first turn to the left, till I comes to Sixth-avenue, and then down to Twenty-sixth, and 'round the corner and along till the fellow raps on the window, and hollers, 'Hold on!' We was just this side of the old lumber-yard, if you know the place, sir."

"Did they get out there?"

"The woman, she got out, but the man stayed inside, and told me to wait."

"What did the woman do?"

"She went to the old house standin' there, on the south side of the street; there was a light in it, and the folks had gone to bed; but she goes up on the porch and rings the bell. Nobody didn't come; so after a bit she rings again. By-and-by I see a light in the shop, and someone opened the door, and in she goes, and the door is shut after her. Then the man he comes out of the carriage and he out also comes again, and into the hack, which the man he holds the door open for her. Then he says, 'Drive us back to where you took us from,' he says. So back I goes; and when they got out he hands me a two-dollar bill, and that's the last I see of 'em."

"Could you find the house on Twenty-sixth-street again?" demanded the inspector, keeping his eyes steadfastly on the other's face.

"Faith I could, sir," answered the other, unhesitatingly. "More by token 'tis the same house a murder was did in a few nights back; I misremember the name, but 'twas a Frenchman. And sure enough," he added, "it was the next evenin' they had the story in the paper; so 'twould be that same one I'm after, to be sure."

"Should you recognise the couple again?"

The hackman appeared to meditate. "I'd maybe know the man, he said at length; "he was as tall as you are, sir, but other like, and had a beard. The woman she was wrapped up in a cloak, with a veil over her face, and what she looked like is more than I can tell you, for I didn't see her, only the clothes of her."

"What has this story to do with the revolver?"

"Indeed, and I'd like to have forgotten that part of it," returned Mr. McBride with easy self-possession. "Here was the way of it. After I left 'em I drove to the stables, and when I got there I opened the door of the hack to pull out the blanket. Something drops out of it, and I picked it up; 'twas a revolver with a black handle to it. Well, sir, not knowin' the address and havin' no use for the like o' them things myself, what does I do next day, but takes it round to the spout shop and raises a few dollars on it. And that's all there is about it."

"What time do you say it was when you drove the couple to 'Twenty-sixth-street?"

"It would be about twelve o'clock, sir."

"How do you know it wasn't later?"

"I couldn't tell you, sir; I didn't examine it."

"Do you know me?" demanded the chief of detectives, abruptly.

"Faith I do, inspector, none better; do you think I would talk so much to a stranger?" returned Mr. McBride with a grin.

"Very well, I shall want you to repeat this story, and possibly sign a deposition." He made a sign to his attendant, who had been waiting at a distance. "Have this man drive you to his stables," he said, "and then bring him to headquarters. You will find me there. Make a note of whatever he may say to you," he added in an undertone. The subordinate nodded, the hack drove away, and the inspector was left alone on the slopping sidewalk. He walked slowly southward, too deeply absorbed in thought to notice the storm that beat in his face.

The evidence which McBride had given was apparently as important as it was unlooked for. So far as it went it was confirmatory of the Shambling Man's theory. Two persons, a man and a woman, who acted mysteriously and evidently wished to avoid being identified, had visited Hanier's shop on the stormy midnight of December 29. It could only have been an urgent errand that sent them there at such an hour and in such weather. The man carried a revolver. There was no evidence that it was discharged in the wine shop, and if Mrs. Hanier's story and that of McBride were both true it was certainly not the weapon that discharged there. But on the other hand it would hardly have been taken by the unknown visitors if they had not contemplated the possibility of using it; and again, it was quite conceivable that McBride might be lying and that he knew more about the pistol than he had chosen to tell.

"Whether or not he lied about the pistol, however," continued the inspector to himself, "his story, so far as it related to his carrying the two persons to Hanier's house, must have been true; for it is confirmed in every detail by Mrs. Hanier herself. He may afterward have found the revolver in the carriage, and have gone back to the wine shop during the row to open the door, and murdered the proprietor. That is possible.

"But if he did that, is it likely that he would have said anything about going to Hanier's at all? There was no necessity for his saying it. He might as easily have stated that he drove the pair to Forty-sixth-street or to One hundredand Fiftieth. I could not find any proof to contradict him; and a guilty man will say nothing tending to incriminate himself if he can avoid it.

"Besides, the manner of speaking was not that of a person having a guilty conscience. I took him quite unawares, and he never hesitated or showed the least embarrassment. His story is consistent, and there is no good reason for disbelieving it. Of course I shall make inquiries, to determine whether he actually was in his stable at one o'clock on the morning of the 30th—the time of the murder; and if that is confirmed, he must be innocent. My impressions so far are in his favour.

"But how does this leave the mysterious man and woman? It strengthens the former case against them in two respects. First, it goes to show that the man with the dark-grey beard who was seen the morning after the murder with a woman on his arm was the same man who accompanied her to the house in the back at midnight; and, secondly, it indicates that in going there they meditated the contingency of having to use violence. They did not intend to use violence on that first occasion, and they could not have used that particular revolver to commit it either then or later: but revolvers are easily come by; and the fact that they had one is prima facie evidence that revolvers are in their line of business. When they missed the one that McBride pawned, they may have procured another and gone back and killed Hanier with it.

"But that is mere hypothesis. There is as yet nothing to connect them directly with the murder. If we could prove that the cigarette case was not taken away by the woman at her first visit we should have something to go on. But nobody could inform us on that point except Hanier, and he is dead.

"As to the prospects of identifying the unknown man and woman, they are no better than they were before. The detective got a glimpse both of the man's face and of the woman's—McBride of the man's only—that is, assuming that the pair who were driven to the wine shop, and the pair who were seen on the sidewalk opposite it the next morning, are the same persons; which is by no means certain. Upon the whole I doubt whether this clue has brought us a step nearer to the solution than we were at first."

Having arrived at this negative conclusion the inspector contracted his brows with an air of astringency, and walked onward with a briker step. In a few minutes, however, he had fallen into another train of thought, and his pace slackened again.

"There is still that Evans's matter to be considered," he muttered. "There is no person of that name at the address given, and that of itself is suspicious. Now let us see! The pawnshop where the white-handled revolver was pledged is kept by a man named Rosenthal. He lives in Ninth-avenue—more than two blocks from Hanier's house—and has a fair reputation. The man calling himself Evans probably lives in the neighbourhood of that pawnbroker. If he is a disorderly character, the likeliest place to come upon traces of him would be among the rum shops of that quarter. If he is a decent fellow, on the other hand, the fact that the bullet fits his revolver is a mere coincidence: and we are still astray. But at all events we must keep an eye on the saloons in the vicinity of Twenty-sixth-street; and instruct Rosenthal to detain any person who may call for the pistol, or to devise some pretext for withholding it until I myself can be communicated with."

When he arrived at the Central Office the inspector sent for McBride and caused his testimony to be taken down in writing and signed. The man did not vary from the statements made in his first story, nor did he add anything material to it. Upon reviewing the case the inspector came to the decision that it was unnecessary to hold McBride, the rather since the people at the hotel could be found if required. Accordingly he was there with his hack at a few minutes before one o'clock on the morning of December 30. He was allowed to go, therefore, with directions to hold himself in readiness for such time as should be wanted; and orders were issued to keep him under surveillance in the meanwhile.

The result of all the pains which had been taken up to this point was not very gratifying. But the interest which the inspector felt in the case strengthened with the difficulties that he encountered; and his determination to succeed in the end was more resolute than ever.

WEDDING AT SOUTH COVE.

On Tuesday, the 18th inst., the picturesque little village of South Cove was all astir as to the marriage of Mr. Henry Edward Ebbage, of Bathend-on-Sea, second son of Mr. W. Ebbage, for many years residing at Halesworth, and Miss Bessie Ellen Pipe, the eldest daughter of Mr. B. Pipe, of the Church Farm, whose family have resided there for half a century. The bride entered the Church of St. Laurence, leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her away, and was attended by three younger sisters and the younger sister of the bridegroom. The ceremony was performed by the Rector (the Rev. G. M. Norris, M.A.) The church was very prettily decorated by the Rector's family, who evinced great interest in the event, and also by the kindly presented the bride with a silver sugar basin, which, during the service, Miss Pipe presided at the harmonium. There was a large company present during the service, and they were afterwards entertained at the house of Mr. Pipe. The happy couple left at about four o'clock for Lowestoft, en route for the metropolis. The presents were numerous, good, and useful.

A TRUE BOON.
THE Cysic and Pool says:—"There is nothing new under the sun," but never was a more erroneous maxim put forward. Within the last twelve months, 10 years, have been made within the last decade in Chemistry, and by the Surgical and Medical Profession and the thousands of cures effected that were thought to be impossible a few years back.
Especially is this noticeable in the cases of the Animal World. A few years ago it was a common thing to hear of the slaughter of valuable animals for the slightest accident which is now looked upon as only a temporary misfortune that can be cured in a few days; and what is the principal secret of this saving of Animal Life? Nothing more or less than the discovery of the Healing Power of the wonderful WHITE OILS, CONDITION POWDERS, and DRINKS for

FOOTBALL NOTES.
[BY HALF-BACK.]
The scratching by Harwich and Parkeston of their fixture with Ipswich Town on Saturday was very disappointing. In fact somewhat extreme. Road ground, their resources should commence their season in a more questionable manner. It seriously has the appearance of funk, and was I a supporter of the concern of the club I should certainly be strongly inclined to consider that that was the explanation of the proceeding. It certainly was much to be lamented that the Harwich men would or could not give us the opportunity of observing of what sort of material their team will be composed this year, as a lively game would be a capital one in their welfare by the good folks of Ipswich. Then again, the game was scratched at such a late period of the week that the Town Club had no opportunity left allowed them for making other arrangements, and consequently the team on Saturday afternoon lately wanted practice in preparation for their struggle this afternoon with the Casuals.

What was one club's loss, however, on this occasion proved to be another's gain. Unquestionably the charity match on Cowell's new ground profited in the matter of gate by the closing of Portman Road ground. Still, however, the public did not turn up at Gyppeswick in the force that they should have done. The lovely weather, the moderate charge of 3d., and the object of the gate ought to have drawn thousands instead of hundreds. Ipswich has not yet reached that stage of popularity in Ipswich which it enjoys in the North and Midlands. Cowell's men did not altogether open their season in a satisfactory manner on Thursday, and to have seen them. The defeat of three to one did by no means exaggerate the superiority of the visitors, as they certainly had a satisfactory day out with their opponents, who were rather fortunate to escape so lightly.

I regret that with so much keen interest taken in the sport by large numbers of the employés of the firm that the talent at their disposal is not better, in order which is by no means so high as at one time was the case. Various remedies have been frequently suggested, but nothing practicable has been found. It is, however, that the club boasts a closed ground, something ought to be done to put their house in order. Personally, I should bail with satisfaction any material improvement in the eleven, who have in past seasons played no unimportant part in Ipswich football.

The club of many initials were on Saturday engaged against the newly-organised Orwell Works team on the Broom Hill ground in the Ipswich School Sports ground. Present were on this occasion supported by Messrs. Woods and Cornell, and some further radical changes were made in the team which lost to the Ipswich Old so badly against the Town on the previous Saturday. The result was that the Orwell Works people quietened the Works by four goals to one. Only two of the forwards who shaped so unsatisfactorily on the previous week did much on this occasion. The Cowell brothers partnered Towns, whilst Miller, at centre, was supported on the left by two fresh men, W. Bennett and H. C. Cockerell. The latter, strangely enough, played quietest were seen to great advantage, and gave the home defence ceaseless employment. There is therefore considerable hope that E. M. P. may, yet, not be found to add a bold bid for the Senior Cup again this season.

The Orwell Works men may also be congratulated on their accession of strength, but with their list of forwards one might be reasonably surprised that they did not succeed in scoring more than one solitary goal. Yet if it is remembered what a splendid defence they had to meet with, the result is not altogether surprising. At any time the Old Boys' defence is good; but assisted by Woods and Cornell between the sticks, it was even considerably more so than usual. A clever pair are J. D. Johnson and A. C. Tanley are doing duty for the Works on the left wing, whilst Andrews, late of Trinity, also appears amongst the forwards. The last mentioned club have probably a bright prospect before them especially as they have the assistance of a professional of such a firm as the Orwell Works should aim at something higher than junior honours. The club meets Diss this afternoon.

Beccles Caxton first eleven opened the season's proceedings on Saturday with an eight goals to nothing victory, at the expense of the Fanconberge School. The odds are somewhat lengthy, but the performance can have but little significance, as regards ascertaining the strength of the Caxtonians, for their opponents were scarcely worthy of their steel. At the best the Fanconberge boys were but a moderately junior team, just how junior can be so strong as they have been. We must therefore wait a little before we can judge of the strength of the senior club holders of 1893.

No movement has yet been made by the Framlingham College footballers, but followers of the sport are anxiously awaiting their re-appearance in the field, for, naturally enough, a great amount of interest attaches to the doings of the Old Boys, as they are one of the strongest teams in the county. As far as the masters are concerned, we have heard no word again to eligible, but whether Lawrence will once more don the scarlet and sticks I am unable at present to state. Whether, however, the leading Framlingham professional with the College, or journeys elsewhere, we are certain to hear of him, as he is sure to take rank amongst the best of goal-keepers, for one of the very few forwards fortunate enough to secure his services. He has, with Grierson, already been assisting the Casuals, for whom he did good work on Saturday, and should the Framlinghamians be reduced to the assistance of only a moderate eleven their defence will be deprived of much of its stability. In this respect they have been singularly fortunate for several years.

The Ipswich Y.M.C.A. now boasts a football club in addition to its many attractions, but the commencement of its career has been singularly inauspicious. They started on Saturday with a match against the second string of the Orwell Works, with the discouraging result of a beating by no less than fifteen goals to nil. This rough treatment is certainly not calculated to inspire unbounded confidence in the brilliance of the career upon which the new venture is now entering. They must not, however, allow this heavy reverse to discourage them. Many another club which has raised itself to eminence has begun its career as disastrously. With the unlimited material—though at present unorganised—at their command, the young Christians will soon be able to give a very different account of themselves.

Mr. O. Baines, hon. secretary of Cowell's Club, writes:—"We are pleased to state that after paying expenses we have been able to hand over to the Ipswich Nurses' Home the sum of £54 5s. as the result of our charity match last Saturday. We are only sorry that we were not better supported, so that we might have given more."

This afternoon, as mentioned above, the Portman Road enclosure will be the scene of an extremely interesting match. The Town will take the field against a team of the Casuals, who, about they be as strongly constituted as they were on the last occasion, will conclude a very warm 90 minutes' exercise. The occasion has been selected by the Ipswich Town Club on which to be devoted. So worthy an object should be an additional inducement to the Ipswich supporters of the club in their charitable venture, and therefore, given fine weather, the fixture should attract a bumping gate. I would suggest that the spectators waive their privilege of free entrance on this occasion.

The League battles continue with unabated energy. Again on Saturday were the whole sixteen clubs in the first Division engaged in the struggle. Everton and Sheffield United remain the only two unbeaten teams out of the 16. The former now boasts 10 points in five matches, beating Notts Forest in their return match at Nottingham by three goals to two. The "Reds," however, showed up much better than in the previous week, and gave their visitors a hot time of it. Sheffield United, on the other hand, were playing at home, and had but little difficulty in taking a couple of points out of West Bromwich Albion by three goals to one. Up to the present the Wearsiders have had but one goal scored against them, and that by Aston Villa—quite a unique performance when it is remembered at present years. The team is much fancied for the championship honours this season, but it is idle to speculate as yet.

One of the most noteworthy performances on Saturday was the victory of Small Heath over the North End team, at Preston, by a goal to love. The newly-promoted Midlanders are certainly doing credit to themselves, for although they have only gained two victories out of five matches played, none of their games have taken place on foreign soil. The results of the other matches in the first division were:—Aston Villa beat Derby County by 3 goals to one. Up to Wolverhampton Wanderers by 2—1; Sheffield United beat Stoke by 3—1; Blackburn Rovers beat Bolton Wanderers by 2—1; whilst Liverpool and Blackburn Rovers played a draw, 2—2. The table revised to date stands as under:—

In the Second Division, Notts Forest, the only unbeaten club, could only gain a point when Newcastle United, at Newcastle. Woolwich Arsenal gained their first victory by beating Bury by 4—2, and other matches resulted in reverses to Rotherham County, 3—1; Grimsby Town beat Manchester City, 5—2; Darwen beat Burton Wanderers, 2—0; Lincoln City beat Middlesbro' Ironopolis, 3—1; Crewe Alexandra beat Yale, 2—0; Newton Heath beat Leicester Fosse, 3—2. On Monday Rotherham Town beat Walsall, 2—1.

Sayings are characteristic of nations. There is more in this than people often think; for instance, a favourite British saying is "Believe everyone to tell the truth till he proves the contrary." Other nations say, "Believe everyone to be untruthful till he proves otherwise." Mark the contrast! Without claiming much credit, it is to be hoped, for the former there is fairness, which is lacking in the latter. Truth and justice claims to prevent, cure, and heal, in cases of all diseases, ills, and ailments, is most invaluable for dressing stings, bites, burns, sores, and wounds. Trovatolo is perfectly safe for old and young. This is to be had from Cosby, Nelson, and Delwyn's Trovatolo, in bottles, 1s. 1½d., and 2s. 9d. Agents:—Messrs. Cornell and Cornell, Chemists, Tavern Street, Ipswich.

PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN IPSWICH SCHOOLS.—Our advertising columns contain an announcement of the competition on Friday, October 5th, for the challenge banners presented by Col. J. H. Josselyn for boys' schools competing will be reduced in number by heats, and the winners of the heats will compete in the final against the holders, St. Mary Stoke boys' school. The holders of the girls' banner, the London Road girls' school, will also have to defend this year's prize, and receive a shilling, but will give an exhibition display accompanied by the band. The Mayor and Mayoress have consented to present the children with prizes to the successful schools. The competition will be held at the Drill Hall, Princes Road, at 2.30 p.m. The shield to be presented to the London Road Girls' Board School at the competition is now on view in the window of Mr. F. Pawsey, Ancient House.

CHURCH PARADE AT IPSWICH.—On Sunday the Ipswich Companies of the 1st V.B.S.R. attended service at St. Clement's Church. Assembling at the Drill Hall, as the "Church call" was played by the band, under Mr. H. Dunt's leadership, the parade state showed the following strength:—Company Sergt.-Major F. G. Bond, Lieut. W. T. Prettjy, five sergeants, 34 band and buglers, 46 rank and file—total 90. B Company.—Captain W. A. Churchman, four sergeants and 60 rank and file. C Company.—Captain C. E. Tempest, Lieut. F. Brown, and five sergeants and 60 rank and file—52. The staff officers present were Colonel Josselyn (commanding the Battalion), Lieut.-Col. H. W. Packard, and Major Adjutant Mackenzie Smith, and Captain Sparkes. The Volunteers were attended by a crowd of townspeople, and the church was crowded to overflowing. After the service the Companies marched to Canon Bulstrode, who delivered a most interesting and suggestive address to the men. Volunteers returned to the Drill Hall, via St. Peter's and Cromwell Street, and were there dismissed.

IPSWICH VOLUNTEERS ON THE RANGE.—The final competition for the grand aggregate prizes by members of the Ipswich Rifle Volunteer Companies 1st Volunteer Battalion Suffolk Regiment took place on Saturday. The conditions were as follows:—A silver cup, given by the Ipswich Rifle Club, at Chuchman's to Class A for the best aggregate made in 5 shots each out of 13 at 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven shots at each range; a silver cup, given by the Shooting Committee to Class B for the best aggregate shot for by the above weeks at 200 and 500 yards, and 500 and 600 yards respectively; and a silver cup, given by Mr. Thomas Sparks to Class C, for the best aggregate at 500 yards. Prvt. T. Plowman proved the winner in Class A, Prvt. T. Brown in Class B, and Prvt. W. Robinson in Class C. The grand aggregate scores were as under:—Class A (grand aggregate), Prvt. T. Plowman average 84·63, 592 runs. Prvt. Cox 82·26, Prvt. Turner 80·69, Sergt. Tye 79·90. Class B: Prvt. J. Brown, average 69·15 runs. Pte. Bugler Bloomfield 67·84, Prvt. Bryant 64. Prvt. W. Robinson, average 23·36, Prvt. Pallant 20·45. In the competition for the silver spoon by members of the Ipswich Rifle Club, which took place on the Wednesday afternoon, Sergt. Fenner proved the winner with 93 points.

IMPROVEMENTS AT ALDEBURGH.—The artizans of this old borough cannot have any reason to complain of want of work during the past 12 months. The trovel, hammer, and mortar have been busy, and the aspect of the town to the other. On the Promenade, a beautifully designed residence has been erected. The greater part of Trinity Road is built, and the rebuilding of Additions have been made to Gower House. Extensive alterations have been carried out to the "Little Casino." The almost new Church of St. Peter's will have large additions in progress. A portion of the "Cowpasture" has been enclosed, and is being laid out as a new and expansive residence built. The good square residence lately used as the post office, and purchased by the Aldeburgh Council is being altered into apartments and offices, whilst on the "estate on the hill," two imposing residences in red brick have been erected and are now tenanted. Great efforts have been made to Hill House, and to the south the "Crag Path" has been "done," and developed into a new public laundry. In the centre of the town two cottages have been taken down, and on the site the post office has been erected. Many other alterations have been made and small villas erected on the Crespigny Estate. The Corporation, ever mindful of its duty, have carried out the scheme of sewerage, and also repairs to its old block of municipal buildings, the Moot Hall. The next movement will be the removal of the old damaged lock-up to make room for the new borough surveyor's office, whilst the present Magistrates' Room will be slightly altered for the use of the Town Clerk, the Magistrates and the Mayor.

BAWDBY VILLAGE CLUB: SUCCESSFUL CONCERT.—A successful concert took place at the Bawdsey Village Club on Saturday evening. The songs were announced by Mr. Cuthbert Quilter, M.P., and a large audience assembled in the Club Room. Amongst the most popular items were those by the Bawdsey Band, Mr. Eley Quilter, Miss Doris Bevington, Mr. Roger Quilter, Mr. Cumberland, Miss Quilter, Miss Ethel Norah Quilter, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Payne, and Mr. Darling were loudly applauded. The proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of books for the Club Library. Mr. Roger Quilter fulfilled the duties of accompanist.

BRAMFORD HARVEST SERVICES.—The harvest thanksgiving services were held in this church on Sunday. The Rev. R. V. Barker, the new vicar of the parish, who has come to reside at the Vicarage, officiated at each service, and collections were made in aid of the East Suffolk Hospital. The church had been beautifully adorned with corn, flowers and fruit by several ladies of the parish, who must have felt well repaid for their labours by the kind words spoken to them by the Vicar. Special psalms were chanted, and the anthem "Sing unto God" (Clare) was sung both morning and evening. The organist was Mr. Fred Morgan. The Vicar, after stating that the services of one had two objects—help for the Hospital and thanksgiving—he proceeded to read an earnest appeal for the sick and needy in the Ipswich Hospital, and in the course of his sermon he gave an interesting account of the origin and growth of hospitals and infirmaries. In the evening the church was crowded, the total collection for the Hospital amounting to £12 6s. 8d.

BRANTHWORTE PARISH CHURCH.—The annual thanksgiving service was held on Sunday afternoon, when the sacred edifice was chastely adorned with corn, fruit and flowers in honour of the occasion. The service was conducted by the Rev. R. Bridges, vicar of Thorndon. Harvest hymns were heartily sung by the choir, with organ accompaniment by Miss Bingley, and the Rev. R. Bridges preached a sermon on "He shall feed His flock" ("Messiah"), was sweetly sung by the Hon. Miss Hanbury, of Thornham Hall. The preacher was the Hon. and Rev. A. Parker, rector of Brome with Oakley. There was a large congregation, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, in the afternoon—A parish tea afterwards took place in the Rector's barn, and an enjoyable social evening followed.

BURGH THANKSGIVING SERVICES.—Harvest thanksgiving services were held in the parish church on Sunday, when the edifice was tastefully and artistically adorned with the products of the earth by Mrs. Cecil E. Green, the Misses Turrall, Miss Rowe, and the Misses Last. The services were conducted by the preacher was the Rev. Charles Maude, rector of Burrowash, Kent, and the collection, in aid of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution, amounted to £2 14s. 8½d. In the afternoon, the Rev. S. Hooke Rosenthal, rector of Burgh (Rev. M. Maude) read the lesson. The collection, in aid of the East Suffolk Hospital, amounted to £4 15s. 4½d. Mr. W. Blackmore presided at the harmonium, special psalms and hymns were sung by the choir, which was supplemented by some members from the Grundisburgh Church choir.

BURY VOLUNTEERS' PRIZE COMPETITION.—On Monday the annual contests for the Ladies' Cup and tradesmen's prize took place at the Westley Butts. Sergt. T. Taylor, who scored 62 points, won the medal and £1 prize. Sergt. Bishop, Sergt. Kipp and Sergt. J. G. Scotcher made the highest scores, with drill points added, a total of 72. There were 68 competitors.

CRESTING ST. MARY QUAY CLUB.—The annual tea took place on Wednesday evening, at the King's Head Inn. Mr. Fred. Ellis, B.A., president, presided, and Mr. James Wright, captain, occupied the vice. A pleasant evening was afterwards spent in toast and song. The chairman, in proposing the first toast, spoke from the chair, and responded to by Mr. Wright, who stated that the Club had played 63 matches, winning 34. The Club had a balance in hand, and hoped that of absent friends were drunk. Songs were sung by Messrs. Baker, Preece, Stevens, Overton, Hood, Wells, Garrod, Hudson, Frith, Wallis, &c.

VOLUNTEER CHURCH PARADE AT DISS.—The annual church parade of the B (Diss) Company 4th V.B.N.R. took place on Sunday morning. Under the command of Capt. F. Taylor, M.P., the men marched to the Corn Exchange, where a service was held prior to their accommodation. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. Mannington, rector. After the service the band, which headed the procession to and from church, played a short programme of music.

HARVEST FESTIVAL AT DISS.—Thanksgiving services were held at Diss Church on Sunday, the sacred edifice being handsomely decorated. The preacher, pul

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29.

CAPTAIN PRETTYMAN AT EAST BERGHOLT.

Capt. PRETTYMAN's speech at East Bergholt on Saturday marks him undoubtedly as a formidable opponent to Mr. EVERETT. His speech was vigorous, humorous, pithy, and it was immensely popular. The candidate for the Woodbridge Division is now no stranger to the district, and the more that is seen of him the more he is liked. Captain PRETTYMAN made it very clear that he is a thorough-going Progressivist, and that he is an infinitely more preferable representative than the present misrepresenter of the thousands of interests that have been placed in his hands. Mr. EVERETT by his steadfast allegiance to the Radical Government has proved himself to be an opponent of popular progress and an enemy to working-class interests. He has disappointed the great majority of his own supporters, his influence in the Division is waning, and if the signs of the times are not more deceptive than they have ever been before, he will not again be honoured with a seat at St. Stephen's as the representative of the interests of the electors of the Woodbridge Division. As Captain PRETTYMAN asks, what has the Government done besides attempting to foist Irish ideas on the nation? Ministerialists are themselves divided in opinion as to whether the Session just concluded should be called barren or fruitful. It is true that the fruits are insignificant, though there has been abundance of work. If the results seem to be incommensurate with the extent of legislative labours, who should be blamed? The Opposition have not been obstructive, while their criticisms have been considerate and generous. No doubt, in the walks of irresponsible frivolity there is hare-brained chatter about obstruction, but this is only because the Government were not allowed to have a free hand in revolutionising the country and subordinating everything to vote-purchasing. In the past Session the Government have shown that they exist solely at the will of the Irish Nationalists and a number of factions composed of fanatics of a very ill-balanced order. All that has been accomplished is the Finance Bill, the utter neglect of our interests in Siam, and humiliation at the hands of the French in the Congo region. The Government of recent times has had such extraordinary opportunities for beneficent legislation. The party in power took all the time of the House, and, while shortening the holidays, lengthened the working days. Just think what might have been accomplished for the betterment of the toiling masses had Lord ROSEBERY acted up to the dictates of his inner consciousness as revealed in his admission of the claims of the "predominant partner." Old Age Pensions and other important matters might have ceased to be mere subjects for essayists had not the present party, aided by Mr. EVERETT and Mr. STEVENSON, a near neighbour, bowed their heads to the crack of the McCarthyite or Healyite whip; but after the exhibition of the utter inability of the Irish Parliamentarians recently to conduct themselves like sane and sober citizens, it is difficult to imagine even Gladstonians caring to submit to the yoke. If the Gladstonian is not prepared to admit that it would be treason to the Empire and morally iniquitous to hand over the destinies of Ireland to the keeping of such a horde of howling Dervishes of the West, perhaps the doctor will call. Britain as soon as the opportunity is afforded, will quicken his conscience, even if it be a Nonconformist conscience, on the subject. These men are undoubtedly clever after a fashion. They are like the educational products of the Sophists in the days of declining Athens, expert rhetoricians and smart actors. They have proved to be incapable of conducting sanely and with propriety even a public convention, and we are only expressing the view of the whole country when we venture to assert that it is high time that "the predominant partner" should cease to be dominated by a band of men whose only care is the fostering of crime and agitation in order that they may live. The speech of Captain PRETTYMAN will help the electorate in the Eastern Counties to realise the actuality of the Government's position, for in this the Ministerial misdeeds are freely and forcibly exposed. In the first place Sir W. HARCOURT has plunged our whole financial system into the direst confusion, and its effect on the agricultural labourer through the landed interest was set forth in no unmistakable terms by Captain PRETTYMAN.

MISREPRESENTED WOODBRIDGE.

In every direction the toilers of the land are suffering from the effects of the Radical legislation.

And whilst all this was being done we are tempted to ask where was Mr. EVERETT, the man who on appearing before the electorate burned with the fervour of another Garibaldi? Alas! in politics as well as in other relations of life, "evil communications corrupt good manner," and the fierce reformer of the last election has settled into an M.P. whose political action seems to be a compound of truckling to the promoters of one of the most wicked organisations ever promoted against civil and religious freedom, and blindly following the directions of the party pullers, irrespective of the wishes of the electors who sent him to the House of Commons to represent their interests. So far as we can make out there does not seem to be a subject on which the member for the Woodbridge Division has a definite policy of his own. In every case the name of "EVERETT-R. L." has been found in the division lists along with the names of men whose existence depends on the troubles of an ignorant and abused Irish electorate. The fag-end of the platforms soon became tarnished at St. Stephen's Surely, when the Budget was being pushed through the House of Commons, Mr. EVERETT might have spoken a word against proposals on a subject that so intimately concerns the future condition of the agricultural labourer. A manly protest from the Radical side of the House might have shamed the robbers and despoilers and prevented the Bill from many of its worst features. But Mr. EVERETT never uttered. His chief characteristic all through the session has been submissive obedience to the behest of the Radical whips. What has the hon. gentleman done to bring about the beneficial changes which, when face to face with the electors, he saw to be of such burning importance? Ye his may search, but you won't find. He has done nothing, he has exercised no influence on the destinies of the Irish party, and the agricultural labourer may wander on and starve, for aught he cares, until the time approaches for the next election. Captain PRETTYMAN gave an illustration of the effects of the increasing burdens on land in the Woodbridge Division, in the case of Lord de SAUMAREZ. Shrubland farm is practically closed, and a large number of labourers will be thrown out of employment, owing principally to the action of the Radical party. Nor is this an isolated case. Daily reports are coming to hand, stating that landed proprietors all over the country are giving up their home farms. The question is, are the holocausts of victims in the person of the agricultural labourer to go on being offered up? As at Shrubland, a hundred or so of people cannot be swept away to the towns without leaving a terrible void in our rural community. Such desolation is following in the train of Radical legislation, and many families are at present destitute and helpless. Such a discharge of men from employment as in the case of the estate of Lord de SAUMAREZ must inevitably be followed by much privation as well as much mental suffering. The most poignant grief and the most serious disturbance of domestic ties among those who hitherto known happiness and comfort. In many instances there is no doubt that another burden will be imposed on the public in the shape of maintaining them. We have little fear that the cry of anguish rising up from many agricultural labourers' families will be unheeded, and even on this point alone, if we know the college of an Englishman, Mr. EVERETT and his associates will be relegated to that obscurity they so richly deserve. We have an admirable illustration of the motives of the Radical party in imposing heavy burdens on the landed interest by that somewhat overcandid friend of the Government, Mr. LABOUCHERE, who let out the truth in the periodical of that name. "There are," says he, "a vast number of squires whose estates are so heavily charged with mortgages and settlements that they have hardly been able to make both ends meet since the fall in the "economic value of the land. The death duce "will be the last straw that will break their "backs." Here we have an open confession of the motive of the Radical party, and that is to destroy the power of the landed interest. They do not care what disaster follows in the train of their cruel legislation so long as they accomplish their ends, but the country will not condemn, when it has appealed to, will range itself unmistakably on the side of true reform, and not with the party whose programme, as has been described by a prominent labour leader, is a batch of political absurdities, and who are in league with a troupe of Irishmen who have shown that their only aim is to disintegrate the Empire,

VALUE OF TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

[By Our London Correspondent.]

FRIDAY MIDNIGHT.

Through the efforts of Miss Ida Wells, assisted by the press, both secular and religious, a deep feeling of indignation has been roused in the country against the persecution of the negroes in the United States by means of lynch law and in other ways. One outcome of this comparatively new agitation is that the Government started in Birmingham for the repression of these barous outrages upon the coloured population. A committee has been formed which proposes to send out a commissioner to the United States to investigate the circumstances which lead to the ebullitions of popular fury that are the scandal of the age, and whether we have still much to learn with regard to the social conditions which have given this crude political system a strong hold on American sympathies. At first, lynching seems to have been rendered absolutely necessary by the lawless disorder that prevailed in some of the Western territories.

A new method of dealing with drunkards has, it seems, been adopted by the Governor of St. Petersburg, General Wahl. Everybody who is found intoxicated in the streets is to be taken to the police stations placarded at certain points in the city, and also published in the official gazette. It is stated that considerable perturbation has been caused by the scheme. It has, however, one weak point. The ordinary street loafer cannot usually read, and would not be particularly disgusted, perhaps, to find his name in the Gazette. But if he could; and persons in a better position of life are most apt to get drunk at home.

The cowboy of the story writers, if he ever existed, is practically extinct. A Texas gentleman, in a recent interview on the subject, said:—"I have been among them under all circumstances, and as a rule they differ but little from farm hands elsewhere. They wear moustaches as a profession from choice, and those give them a picturesque appearance, but beyond a pistol and a knife in their belts, which are necessary by the nature of their work, there is nothing ferocious looking about them. When they go to town, as they seldom do, most of them put on their best clothes, and look as much like as a farmer in Ohio. A few will get drunk, but you can find much wilder characters in a city than you can find among the cowboys. I have seen most of the plains They usually drink quietly, and go to sleep in a chair, remain there till morning, and go home. There have been cases where men have terrorised Western towns, and they are invariably reported as cowboys, when, as a matter of fact, they seldom if ever are."

In consequence of the pulling down of the old houses opposite the Deanery for the new Chichester Cathedral, the Vice-General's office for marriage licences, etc., has had to seek new premises from September 29th, and in consequence the Faculty Registry of the Province of Canterbury removes this week into No. 3, Creed Lane (Doctors' Commons), three doors from the top of Ludgate Hill, where the business will have been carried on on the ground floor. The old archway (from St. Paul's Churchyard, and the Sir Christopher Wren house and offices over it, on the left of the archway, Gentlemen, previous to the removal of all wills to Somerset House in 1874, will be closed within nine months.

The importance of technical education as a factor in the prosperity of an industrial nation is every day coming to be more widely recognised. The matter, however, is one to which Germany has given less attention than many Continental countries, and in which London has been behind most of the great centres of industry. The Board of Agriculture have just issued a report on the technical instruction given during the year by the London County Council, and it is clear that if there was some hope for the "county of derelict farms." Ploughing, dairying, bee-keeping, and the science of agriculture have been taught with great success. The instruction in dairying is carried out by a travelling dairy, which has visited a number of centres and lectured 171 pupils. The system involves general oral instruction in the morning, and practical work with churns, &c., in the afternoon. Similar instruction has been given at Chelmsford, where the scientific part of the work may be studied. Next year the County Council will offer similar facilities at Cambridge under the new scheme of agricultural education.

The suggestions now in the air for the complete transformation and adornment of the Thames below Richmond by the construction of a lock at either Battersea or Chelsea Bridge, are receiving favourably amongst boating men. Though the change would be in some respects an advantageous one, the conversion of the river into a tideless lake would not add to the championship course considerably more irksome than it is at present, and would quite alter the character of the time-honoured Tideway race. One immediate result would be a considerable curtailment in the period during which the Thames Police Force are employed on Metropolitan waters, as they would no longer require time to get accustomed to a tidal river. The London Rowing Club would be deprived of any of the best weeks of training, in which they always take the keenest interest, and the hope prevails that the consequent diminution in the number of boats would bring of embankments on either side, and these are really needed.

The burglary season has begun with the shortening of the days. I hear that one or more gangs have been at work a good deal of late in the suburbs of the King's Cross. As a rule they have contented themselves with stripping of lead, and have done very well in this respect. Once in a little while, however, a "coup" has been carried out which is almost identical with that effected in Whitby Wood some years ago at the expense of Mr. Wilson Barrett. A family went off for their holidays, leaving the house up. A day or two afterwards a neighbour noticed that a window entered the house with a master key. They literally stripped the place bare. Every article of furniture was removed, together with the carpets and even the bell metals. The doors were actually unhinged, but apparently no room could be found for them in the van, and so they were left behind. The van used on the occasion of the feat was easily discovered from the neighbours, who noticed it as an ordinary migration. The police declare that so daring a piece of burglary has not occurred in London for several years past. So far its depredators remain quite undiscovered, or even suspected.

WICKHAM MARKET GAS COMPANY.

ANNUAL DIVIDEND.

The annual meeting of shareholders in the Wickham Market Gas Company was held at the White Hart Hotel, Wickham Market, on Saturday, when a dividend declared. Messrs. T. Minter, W. Hill, and W. J. Bales were appointed directors. A vote of thanks was passed to Messrs. Garrod, Turner & Son, Ipswich, whose gratuitous services have been much appreciated.

TOWN AND COUNTRY.

EAST BERGHOLT JOTTINGS.

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE AT EYE.

WARNING TO CONSERVATIVES.

FRIDAY Midnight.

The trade unionists are now seriously concerned over what is described as the redemption of the agricultural labourers. At the Norwich congress they discovered that the labourer is a person who needs all their keen and acute sympathies, and, in fact, he is the only unfortunately ineffectual to the purposes of trade unionists. Mr. Joseph Arch's organisation is in the last throes of an unregarded death, and the village political economy organisations have a miserable and fitful life and must soon die from inanition. There is no better prospect over the Atlantic, which was to have set up things on under the most approved trades unionist auspices. Perhaps the labourer is willing to cheer the dismal philippics and lachrymose wailings that, at times the orators proceed to flip the platitudes of the thin economics which they have learnt, he is aghast at the marvellous prospect opening out before him, and too timid to take advantage of it. Every effort to make the labourer a unionist, and so a Conservative trade unionist has failed, and we believe this will fail too. Still, the men who will find employment in the agitation have their interests to look after.

The latest growl from the recent Norwich Congress bears out the oft-reiterated statement that the objects for which this year's Trade Union Congress met were entirely subverted, and that it was utilised to air the wild dreams of socially wild dreamers. The Secretary of the Boiler Makers' Society writes to his Union:—"It is a misnomer to call the Congress at Norwich a Trades Union Congress, for this it has not been and has become an annual gathering of advanced Socialists, whose dreamy ideas find vent in strongly worded resolutions, which we cannot endorse. The Imperial Parliament is to be turned into a Trades Union Congress, which is to rule with an iron hand labour and capital, land, railways, mines, hours, wages, food supply, dwellings, and the migration of workmen. The Trades Union Congress is being found out, and, with hard-headed representatives like the writer quoted, they will probably find a force to be reckoned with, and more necessary by the nature of their work, than is nothing ferocious looking about them. When they go to town, as they seldom do, most of them put on their best clothes, and look as much like as a farmer in Ohio. A few will get drunk, but you can find much wilder characters in a city than you can find among the cowboys. I have seen most of the plains They usually drink quietly, and go to sleep in a chair, remain there till morning, and go home. There have been cases where men have terrorised Western towns, and they are invariably reported as cowboys, when, as a matter of fact, they seldom if ever are."

By a somewhat remarkable coincidence, no less than three vicars of Eye—two past and the present—will be in the town to-day (Saturday). They are the Rev. William Page Roberts, who was vicar from 1864 to 1879, also now vicar of Eye; the Rev. Arthur Arundell of St. Peter's, Vere Street, London; the Rev. Canon Campbell, vicar from the latter year to 1893, and now rector of Okeford, North Devon; and the Rev. A. J. Spencer, the present vicar, who was inducted to the living on the 2nd December last year. Another curious fact in this connection is that the two former vicars of Eye will both be preaching in East Anglia on Sunday, Canon Campbell at Framlingham and Mr. Roberts at Ipswich—and most interesting announcement of all to residents in Eye and the district—the Rev. W. Page Roberts at Eye Church in the evening. It must, however, be a centre of attraction for the "cloth," for this week, in addition to the presence of the rev. gentlemen mentioned above, the borough has been honoured by the presence of the Right Hon. and Most Rev. R. B. Gregg, D.D., Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of Ireland (Mrs. Spencer's brother-in-law), who has been on a visit to the Rev. Arthur J. and Mrs. Spencer at Eye Vicarage.

Familiarity with the oft-told tale of the difficulty in disposing of land at remunerative prices in East Anglia, added to the "depression" which prevails in regard to agriculture and the poor return which farmers have been getting for their capital and labour, created in some people's minds a certain amount of contempt. Eastern Counties landowners may therefore sustain some benefit and comfort from the knowledge that they have brothers in adversity in the Royal county of Berks. Here an estate of 830 acres, known as the Manor Farm, near Newbury, has been sold for £25,500, or at the rate of 26 per acre, the growing timber on the estate being included in the bargain. About 30 years ago the same estate, which possesses land adapted for the training of racehorses, and is situated in a village which has a railway station, was considered worth fully £30,000! The disparity between the value of land then and now is sufficient comment in itself.

The Felixstowe Dock and Railway Company are to be congratulated on the improvement in trade at their dock, and the number of large vessels which have recently been chartered to that port. Within a fortnight three timber vessels have made their way thither are for Messrs. Prentice Bros., of Stowmarket, have been discharged at Felixstowe, the last of which was conveyed to the mills by a train-load of 25 feet of water and carrying 2,300 tons—one of the largest cargoes imported into the Eastern Counties—of pitchpine from Pensacola, Florida, where, according to a recent report, there is an unlimited supply of the mineral. The vessel is actually progressing both as a health resort and a seaport.

It is the rule with British juries when a person meets death by his own hand to modify their verdict by the useful addition of the words "while temporarily insane." We are pleased, however, to see that an inquest held on the 17th inst. has resulted in convictions, and of course having regard to the weight of evidence, returned a verdict of self-murder which cannot under the circumstances be disputed. Deliberate in the extreme as the suicide of a girl just attaining to womanhood must under any circumstances be, the case under the Coroner's notice. Clara Ipswich stay factory operative, whose body was found in the river Orwell. A family row is said to show that uncontrollable passion and resistance to parental rebuke caused her to destroy her life. As we have already had occasion to express our indignant conduct of the Jurymen who investigated the case, but a very pertinent question, at the same time, suggests itself. What were the sons in the "family row," were they inquiring into the death, under similar conditions, of one in a higher station of life than that of the unfortunate girl Louisa Clara Ipswich, have returned such an outspoken verdict?

One of the leading Radical organisations in the Metropolis took time by the forelock and some weeks ago spurred on its party to select candidates for the new district and parish councils, at the same time reminding them that the time was short for the organisation as it could muster for the moment, that if Liberals were to be returned to power in the first election, the first elections those "wicked Tories" would forestall them and carry all the seats. In spite of this warkiks Radicalism, the Liberal party has been slow to move, already commencing the "no politics" cry, with the object, we suppose, of nobbling the new authorities. "No politics" may sound very nice to the uninitiated, and please the passive nature of peaceful citizens; but it is necessary to utter a note of warning against this specious kind of electioneering. Undoubtedly a few Conservatives may favour such a proposal, which, if carried out in an honourable and straightforward manner, would be a very good thing, inasmuch as a great deal of unnecessary party bitterness and rancour would be avoided. Unfortunately, however, our experience of Radicalism is that whenever it professes a desire for peace, and the cessation of party strife, it means thereby that it is invariably an opportunist move to take an unfair advantage of its opponents. On this ground we would warn the Conservatives to be on the alert, and see that they are fairly represented in the new government of the village.

It is with regret we learn that Captain and the Honble. Mrs. Lacon are leaving Ackworth House for a time, and will take up their residence in Brighton. The parish can ill afford to lose a man like Capt. Lacon even for a time. He is an active magistrate, and at all times willing and ready to give up any amount of his to be either a benefit or enjoyment to his neighbours. Anyone who has had the pleasure of meeting on Saturday morning, preparing for the Conservative fête, would have acknowledged his usefulness, and his great activity in the party's happiness in the hundreds of people in East Bergholt and the surrounding villages.

Considerable improvements have been made of late in East Bergholt churchyard by Mr. Henry Juby, churchwarden, in trimming up the shrubs, cutting away overhanging branches, and laying down paths whereby the paths are dry and firm in any weather. The old sun-dial, too, has been cleaned up, painted, and gilt, and Mr. Juby has also erected a stone there to hold a watch or his kitchen clock to the right and proper time of the day. It is not every church that can boast a sun-dial, and when the sun shines it is found to be a good order. What with the old sun-dial on the south, and the new gilt weather-cock, the grey old church is surrounded by venerable friends.

On Sunday last the Rev. J. Hancox, rector of Finborough Magna, formerly curate of East Bergholt, did duty in the parish church throughout the day, the Rector, the Rev. J. J. Juby, being away at Llandaff, attending to his duties as examining chaplain in the diocese. Many of the poor old people in the village are blessing the name of the Rev. Juby for his kind and gentle manner towards them he had secured their esteem and respect long ago.

FAILURE OF A CLACTON BUILDER.

SEQUEL TO A CUTTING CONTRACT.

The summary of affairs in the case of Norman de Maid, of Church Road, Clacton-on-Sea, builder, has been issued by the Official Receiver. The debts due to unsecured creditors total £1,040 19s. 10d., and the deficiency is calculated at £1,440 17s. The Official Receiver says:—The debtor states that he commenced business about more than 20 years ago as a builder, then a capital of about £200. He attributes his present position to the fact that he has recently taken a contract on which he has lost a considerable sum of money.

PAINFULLY SUDDEN DEATH

OF AN IPSWICH WIDOW.

The Ipswich Borough Coroner on Wednesday held an inquest at the Borough Infirmary on the body of Emma Fox, aged 69, a widow, living at 5, Friar's Road, who on Tuesday evening was in her usual health, and after partaking of a good supper, retired to bed early. At about half-past two o'clock the next morning her daughter was awakened by deceased, who complained of pain in the chest, and sent out for help for, but death ensued in a very short time. Mr. W. J. Studdon attributed death to natural causes, probably to attack of syncope. The Jury returned a verdict accordingly.

COSTLY POACHING AT SHOTLEY.

On Tuesday, at Samford Petty Sessions, John Sadler and Alfred Wade, brickmakers, of Shotley, were charged with trespassing on land belonging to the executors of the late Mr. Alexander Goddard, in search of game. They were each fined 10s. and 10s. 9d. costs, or 14 days' hard labour.

THE SEA GIVES UP ITS DEAD.

SHOCKING DISCOVERY AT ALDEBURGH.

During the easterly breeze of Sunday evening the remains of a body were washed ashore to the north of Haven House, Aldeburgh. It had evidently been washed up, the head being gone and all the lower portions of the legs. The Aldeburgh Urban Council gave notice to Inspector Mann, who had the body removed to the mortuary in a shell.

CLAYDON VACCINATION PROSECUTIONS.

Ambrose Easdon, carpenter, Barking, and George Ealing, coal merchant, Claydon, were summoned before the Needham Market Justices on Wednesday, by George Fiske, vaccination officer of the district, for refusing to have their children vaccinated. The first-named defendant pleaded guilty, and was fined 10s., while Ealing, who did not appear, was mulcted in a fine of 11s.

G.F.S. WORK IN WICKHAM MARKET

The festival of the Girls' Friendly Society for the district was held at Wickham Market on Wednesday. The girls met at the Foresters' Hall in the afternoon and partook of tea, after which selections of vocal and instrumental music were rendered. Services in the Vicar was afterwards delivered in the church. Miss Pilkington (Framlingham), Mrs. Housecroft, Miss Furneaux, Miss Bolton, Miss Bloomfield, Miss Bacon, Mrs. Sinclair (Monewden), Mrs. Garrod (Badingham), and Mrs. Nutt (Rendlesham), had charge of the girls.

IPSWICH BOY FALLS INTO THE RIVER.

ANOTHER RESCUE BY THE IPSWICH DIVER.

About half-past three on Saturday, Cocker, the "Ipswich diver," smartly rescued a lad who had fallen into the river from the end of the pier, or landing-stage for the Woolwich Belle. Beyond a thorough drenching, the lad appeared none the worse for his immersion. He subsequently received a gift of his smartness from one or two ladies and gentlemen who witnessed the occurrence.

A GREAT HISTORICAL EVENT

COMMEMORATED AT BENDHAM.

Commemorative services were held on Sunday in the Congregational Church, Bendham, in connection with the signing of the "Church Covenant" on the 23rd of September, 1694, 200 years ago, the church having been formed of seven families that date in the neighbouring village of Swelling. A large congregation assembled, many coming from Saxmundham and surrounding places. The Rev. H. Freeman, the present minister, gave an interesting account of the past history of the church. The Rev. Thomas Wm. Will Odber, Holliler, a former minister, gave an address on the religious history of the period when the church was first formed. A united devotional service was held, when a suitable address was given by the Rev. J. G. Brown, of Saxmundham.

"PAYING FOR MEAT AND BEER."

A FRAMLINGHAM BEERHOUSE-KEEPER AND HIS CUSTOMERS.

On Saturday, at the Framlingham Sessions, Alfred Wells, beerhouse-keeper, Saxtead, was charged with keeping his licensed premises open at 10.45 p.m. on the 1st September, contrary to the Act of 1872.—P.C. Cook, of Dennington, deposed that he was on duty on the night named, heard talking, and saw a glass full of beer and a quart mug. Defendant was fined 10s. and 10s. costs. About 10.45 he opened the door, and then saw the defendant, his wife and Charles Cutler and his two boys. He asked Wells what the people were there for, and he replied, "To pay me for some meat and beer." He only saw Cutler drink.—Mr. Rose Cobbold: Why don't you return to your father?—Applicant: He has left Ipswich, and is living at Framlingham, as is living.—Mr. Rose mentioned that her outward appearance would not lead one to suppose that she was the daughter of a publican, and she had been sent to the police-court for the Workhouse, and at the suggestion of the Magistrate Mr. M'Gowan, the Court missionary, interrogated her with a view of securing her admission to a Home.

THE SOUTHEND CASE.

READ'S LIFE IN PRISON.

Since he was committed to take his trial on the charge of murdering Florence Dennis, James Canham Read has had interviews with several of his relatives. They took place at Chelmsford, the prisoner having been moved from his friends by the wire fencing across the apartment. Read talked freely of his position, strongly protesting his innocence, and expressed great confidence of an acquittal at the forthcoming trial. He since been allowed to see his friends alone, and expressed satisfaction at the prospect of his wife being likely to do fairly well in the laundry which has just been opened for her. Mr. John Waters, the solicitor engaged for the defence, has had several interviews with his client. He says that every facility was given to him for private communication with the prisoner, which he was allowed to see in the solicitors' room with only a warder outside the glass door. His

PRIMROSE FETE AT EAST BERGHOLT

THE GOVERNMENT'S MISDEEDS.

STIRRING SPEECH BY CAPT. PRETYMAN.

HOW THE AGRICULTURIST IS IGNORED.

SCATHING CRITICISM ON THE BUDGET.

TENANTS AND LABOURERS DRIVEN FROM THE LAND.

With summer-like weather, such as that which prevailed on Saturday, a more desirable place than the grounds of Ackworth House, East Bergholt, could scarcely be found for a Primrose League fête. Primrose Leagues are nothing if not thorough, and to this act must be attributed much of the success which attended the annual fête—political, social, and recreative in its character—which was held under the auspices of the East Bergholt and Capel Conservative Association and Primrose League. Capt. Lacon, who, with his good lady, is about to leave East Bergholt for a lengthened stay (we hope in Brighton, and soon) to stimulate the Conservative cause in his district, and by placing his favourably situated and picturesque grounds at the disposal of the party he added one more to the many kindnesses which the party had received at his hands, kindnesses which materially assisted in providing a most enjoyable half-holiday for the inhabitants of a thousand miles round the neighbourhood. The fête was held in the ground immediately facing Ackworth House, and here were to be found gathered together representatives, who were continuously maintained from shortly after noon until nine p.m. Materially assisted by Mr. C. Whiting (the genial host, no doubt, on the occasion) had arranged an interesting programme of athletic sports, for each of which several handsome prizes were given, and some amateur character of the races undoubtedly providing much more than could have been had under other conditions than that of a village fête in all its rural simplicity. Capt. Lacon and Mrs. Lacon, with their daughter (Miss Judge), Mr. F. Barker (that of starter); Mr. Wheeler, clerk of the course; and Mr. G. Reynolds, referee; while the Bradford Old Prize Band, by kind permission, contributed its popularity by discoursing a selection of first-class music. Details of the athletic sports :—100 yards flat race for boys under 12, 1 Bacon, 2 Brooks, 3 Morley. 75 yards flat race for girls under 16, 1 M. Norman, 2 E. Hopkins, 3 Bacon. 100 yards flat race for men, 1 G. Barkshaw, 2 W. Franklin. Half-mile race, 1 J. Parker, 2 A. Towns. 100 yards sack race, 1 Wilson, 2 G. Barkshaw, 3 Bacon. 120 yards race, 1 J. Baker, 2 G. Cordle. 120 yards hurdle race, 1 W. Franklin, 2 J. Parker. All-comers 120 yards race, 1 J. Wheeler, 2 J. Baker, 3 Bacon. Obstacle race for men, 1 G. Cordle, 2 W. Goodson.—After dusk, the village-green was illuminated with Chinese lanterns, and people to enjoy the promenade concert and pyrotechnic display which had been provided for their enjoyment. The latter took place on the north side of the house, in the rear of the lawn with a charming background of foliage, which had the effect of lighting up the whole of the surrounding country, and casting a weird glow on the handsomely stately walls of Ackworth House. To the numerous visitors the fireworks were undoubtedly and were thoroughly enjoyed alike by all classes. The most important item of the programme of events of the gathering was the political portion. This was most certainly a complete success, both as regards the vigorous and large attendance of Conservatives from the electors of the Woodbridge Division are hoping to see become their Parliamentary representative), and the enthusiasm which was displayed by the audience in listening the bandstand (accompanied by Captain Lacon, Sir Alfred Hughes, Mr. F. S. Furniss, Mr. Whiting, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Reynolds, and Mr. Barker), man, during an interval after the sports, delivered a trenchant and exhaustive address upon the agricultural outlook generally, during the course of which he was loudly cheered, besides benefitting from frequent complimentary descriptions by a labourer present who voiced the feeling of his class towards the speaker. Capt. Lacon presided over the open-air meeting, and among those present were the Rev. Edmund Phillips, Mrs. Lacon, the Honourable Mr. Lacon, Honourable Mr. Halford, Mrs. Garnham, Captain and Mrs. C. Halford, Mr. and Mrs. Minor Hunting, Mr. Gore, Mrs. Gore, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, Mr. Cutler, Mr. and Mrs. Bonachamp, Mr. and Miss Cobbold, Miss Pretyman, Miss Major and Mrs. Squirl Dawson, Mrs. Josselyn, Mr. Hills Tregoz and Miss Deane, Rev. and Mrs. Coyle, Miss Lisa, Sir A., Lady and Miss Hughes, Mrs. and Miss Bowden, Miss Cole, Mr. Luard, Mrs. Woolley, Mr. Woolley, Mr. Kerridge, Mrs. Peck, Mrs. Lewisham, Misses Miller, Mr. Gridley, Mr. and Mrs. Mann, Mr. Chissall, Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Reynolds, &c.

AMUSEMENT FOR THE SPECTATORS

Introducing Capt. Pretyman as their Conservative candidate, the Chairman said they had not to look long to find a man who would be their member to represent them in Parliament—he did not say in the present Parliament, because he did not call it a Parliament!—but

A DISGRACE TO HUMANITY.

But he hoped the Conservative electors would find for them out, and that before long they would cease to represent the majority of the people of the United Kingdom. (Cheers.)

Capt. PRETYMAN, who met with a most cordial reception on rising to speak, said he was very glad of the opportunity of meeting them on that occasion at East Bergholt on the old theme, viz., that we did not get on very well now, and that we thought we might, under other circumstances, get on better. (Laughter.) He heard someone say, during the afternoon, "Things had not so bad they were worse." He had heard that same remark made for the past eight or nine years, and yet things had got worse and worse, until one could not say what was going to happen to the land and country generally. It was absolutely impossible for a man, wherever he might be, if he farmed land under average conditions, to get out at eight or ten shillings a scomb. To grow wheat and as both farmers and labourers wished to do, it would cost a great deal more than the £3 10s. or £4 an acre they could get for it. The wretched prices prevailing. (Applause). They could not pay labourers enough to work and maintain their wives and families on seven or eight shillings per week. He had heard a great deal about a "living wage." He most thoroughly believed in the principle to the extent that it was not right to ask any man to work all day long for eight or nine shillings to keep and family upon. (Cheers.) Whether or not an employer could obtain profit out of the work for which he engaged men, or whether he could not, yet, to ask the wages he was paid to labourers were no greater, and in some cases less, than was paid 20 years ago, was wrong, but what had been the result? The result, no doubt, was to a certain extent, to put money into the pockets of the tenant farmers and landlords of the land, but it had gone into the pockets of the labourers if they had received the wages they ought to have had? Clear became capitalists. They might say that was very wrong, but

WHAT HAD BECOME OF THE MONEY?

It had come back to the labourer, because the money which had been accumulated in years past was now being expended in the shape of poor-rates and [illegible] wages while it lasted. That, however, could not go on for ever. As long as the money lasted he believed people, who had money to spend, would spend it to some time as long as they could; but when the money came to an end the country would be in many cases in their resources were fast being exhausted. The depression process was not, perhaps, as noticeable As though they all could wish it to be. He knew of many farmers here and another farmer there, one landlord here and another there unable to keep their farms going, and they could not find tenants. People were not in a bad thing it was after the farms were empty, but they did not see what was going on to meant in the aggregate. If he could give them the figures he had a number of hardworking respectable farmers and landlords, and especially small occupiers, who had been driven off the land, and with their properties and had had to abandon the project, and if he could show the amount of money lost to the country as a result, he was sure he would be more than anything he could tell them. And that was going on all over the country; for did not they see that week the large number of farms to be let? And did not the wealthier landlords were also affected; for did they not see the previous week a

GREAT AGRICULTURAL SALE AT SHRUBLAND

—Lord De Saumarez's estate—because the owner could not any longer meet the terms and conditions of agricultural leases, afford to keep up his home farm, and decided to "shut up shop." What did that mean to the working man? It meant what they had seen in many cases, and other large establishment—that aged men who had worked for years on his estate, and had in consideration been given light jobs, for which they were well repaid, would lose their employment; and other persons, some of whom, for instance, lived by milk daily, free from the farm, would lose from the circumstance. These were the people—the people dependent on the land through the agricultural depression—who would suffer when the income from the land was reduced. Would not they say (asked the speaker) that in these circumstances it should be the duty of any Government, when it saw a great industry, upon which 10,000 of our countrymen depended, going to the wall, and the people being driven off the land, to try and devolve some means to check the fall and put that industry upon a better footing? (Cries of "Yes.") We had our own remedy, and one which professed to be the friends of the working man. (Laughter.) What measure had they brought forward to help the man who had got their living by sport—the culture? (Cries of "Not one.") What had they done for these men? (Cries of "Nothing.") Unfortunately they had done

WORSE THAN NOTHING.

(Hear, hear.) To burdens on agricultural land forced on the country side a great deal of ill-feeling between and the labourers. (Hear, hear.) Had the Government lightened those burdens? No; they had by the last Budget added to them, and made them more onerous than ever known within the memory of man. That Radical Budget, which had two main features, simply meant a doubling of the death duties—a doubling of one of the main features of that Radical Budget was to put an extra tax on beer. One result would be that when a labourer had to pay an extra sixpence per barrel for beer he would have to pay a little more for it, and the factory of the Budget was the Death Duties. The alteration that when a man who had considerable property left, the tax which his successor would have to pay would be something like eight or nine years' entire income from the land. This Budget, he assured them, would make it impossible for any country gentleman who inherited a considerable estate to live upon it. Who would suffer? The educated classes would suffer, because they did not belong to anything he never had it. But the money which he would have had, with which a most reliable and acceptable beverage."—Health.

he would have lived on the estate, and which he would have spent on the land, paying it in wages to the people on the estate, would in London. Did anyone suppose that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would give the people as much as they would have got if the money had been kept in the country. (Laughter.) He thought most of the labourers could prefer that he should give them 10s. or 15s. a week than that he should pay the money to Sir William Harcourt, and then have the chance of getting it back again. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) His belief, however, was that the money would not benefit out of money as when he got it first hand. (Laughter and cheers.) If this Budget had been passed before the Captain Pretyman came into the estate in that neighbourhood, he could not have lived on the estate. He should have remained in the army and not drawn the £2000 a year which he received from the taxes. What, then, would have happened to the men who had received the money produced out of the labourer's pocket? It was no use to look into the way spent there, the money would have gone to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and he did not think that he would be much better again. Was he doing good to the land? ("No.") The Radicals tried to make them believe it was.

A PERPETUALLY EXCELLENT THING

for all poor men if they could escape taxation by only taxing the rich, and they would find that when the rich man got less money he employed less labour, and if he had not the money in consequence of his having to pay it to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in London the result was that the labourer would suffer. What they all wished was that taxation should be borne equally by all classes, and not by one class more than another. If they went on the wild goose chase of putting on taxation by only taxing the rich people they would fly against all the laws of natural economy. He could tell them what the rich man was. He was a steam, and if he blew off steam he would fall out at the bottom. (Laughter.) But if they put nothing in at the top they would be unable to shake much out of the bottom; while if it was put into the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer put his head in and shook half out, and then where would they be? (Great laughter, and "It'll be gone.") Turning to another phase of the subject, the speaker asked what had we got on the land? Everything was against it. They had no land-owning capital men—for landlords, farmers, and labourers had given over fighting; they had learnt to respect each other's opinions, and were friends once more. What did they see then? The remarkable fact that was lying idle in the Bank of England. Turning to another aspect of the outlook, Capt. Pretyman said it was remarkable that while they had on the land everything to discourage them, there was a most extraordinary lying idle in the banks. People would not put their money where they could not feel a safe investment. Here were agriculturists wanting money, and there were people eager to lend money, if they could only see their way to get proper security for it. There were those who would buy land without any question of profit, but they hesitated because Radical legislation made them feel it was insecure. Another cause of unrest was that the Radical party were talking about the nationalisation of the land, whatever that might mean. A man did not care to buy land, spend a lot of money, and then have it taken from him lose the land as well as his money. He believed it would be impossible for Government to pass such measures as would

and they must have people who would spend money on it. The first thing wanted was to make the land secure; the second to give some chance of making a small remunerative profit. Those things were, of course, another thing which affected the spending of money, and that was the disgraceful robbery which had been perpetrated by the Government and many by bubble companies such as those of Baron Hirsch's colonisation in the south. ("Shame.") But making the land secure, and offering some reasonable chance of a profit from it, were just the things which the Government had not done. The fact was that the Government had no doubt done some wonderful things in other directions. They said they were going to do a great deal for Ireland, and they were going to do nobody any good. (A Voice: "They can't.") Well then he (the speaker) need not talk any more. (Laughter.) But what had they done for Ireland? Take Labour Bill in the year. ("Labour Bill

DEPLORABLE STATE OF AFFAIRS.

AGRICULTURE DEMANDS SERIOUS ATTENTION.

PHASES OF MICHAELMAS AUCTIONS.

[By Our Special Correspondent.]

I have sometimes been charged with painting matters agricultural in too black a light. What says Farmer Pretyman's recent address at East Horsfield? I am, at least, in very good company, for the gallant Captain knows what he is talking about, having both seen and tasted of the things of which he spoke. Some of us Michaelmas men this year have told tales full of woe, and with reason. The Shrubland sale is pre-eminently one of these. Captain Pretyman spoke of Lord de Saumarez as having decided to "shut up shop." This is a very suggestive simile, the closing process in this instance meaning something more than the mere shutting up of a large commercial establishment. In the latter case the employés would be sent adrift to seek other employment, or to help themselves in some other way as best they could, and so with the employer. But when a nobleman like Lord de Saumarez feels that he is unable under present conditions to keep up his home farm, not only are a number of men, some of whom, perhaps, have spent a long life on the estate, thrown out of employment, but, of greater importance from this instance, is the closing process in this instance of the employés would be sent adrift to seek other the mere shutting up of a home farm, which are so acceptable and essential to aged people who have little or nothing else to live upon.

FEEL THE PINCH.

and mourn that things have come to such a pass that my lord is no longer able to carry on his establishment in the munificent manner he was wont to do in former times. Then, as now, the agricultural world in Suffolk, and "Ichabod" may be written upon many a once large and flourishing rural establishment, with results only known to and fully appreciated by those resident in the immediate locality. The country house, once the centre of free hospitality, are no longer—or many of them, at least—what they once were. We have to lament the reasons which have brought about this deplorable state of things. One has often heard the remark that matters will not be right until they cannot be worse. "Then some remark," says Captain Pretyman, "has been made for eight or ten years, and yet things have got worse and worse, until one cannot say what is going to happen to the land and to the country generally. The present prospects for any good are appalling under average conditions to grow wheat at 8s., 9s., or 10s. a coomb." Captain Pretyman went on to speak of the Budget and the Death Duties, and he argued that the alterations meant that "a man who was rich was considerably taxed, and the tax which his successor would have to pay would be something like eight or nine years' entire income from the land. This Budget would make it impossible for any country gentleman who inherited his property to live upon it unless he had other private investments. Who would suffer? The gentleman would not suffer, because if a person did not succeed to anything he never had it. But the money which the owner of the land while alive would have to pay would be a tax on the estate, and which he would have spent on the estate, paying it in wages to the people on the estate, would go to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in London. It was certainly a question for the Chancellor of the Exchequer how would give the people as much as they would have got if the money had been kept in the country." I have ventured to quote Captain Pretyman to this extent,

NOT FROM A PARTY POINT OF VIEW,

because it is the colonel I know nothing about party politics, but to show that the great agricultural industry has been reduced to a condition which demands the serious attention, and I would go so far as to say the assistance, of the powers that be. I know very well that there is a general opinion that the Government cannot very well extend the help which is urgently needed. It might, perhaps, be very difficult to suggest how the Government could render direct substantial benefit, but, as has often been remarked, there might at least be on the part of the Government authorities a recognition of the sad condition to which agriculture has been reduced, and an acknowledgment of its special claim to consideration. Yet the Government has been careful to point out, there is plenty of money waiting for investment if only something could be done to make it evident that money placed in land would be secure against changes during the far reaching which are so often threatened. There are other which have been developed during the past week. We had, for instance, at the Shotley sale, evidence afforded of the existence of a butter as well as cream separator. The late Mr. Henry Spurling had provided himself with an Alexandra cream separator for his fine dairy of red polls. He was not a gentleman likely to hide his light under a bushel, and he was wont to say that a penny in a good thing he was not slow to let his neighbours know about it. He expressed himself perfectly amazed on finding that whereas his weekly produce of butter was 60lbs. before he had the separator, it went up to about 84lbs. the week after he had it in use. Yet the thrift of this kind many of my friends will go on on the old lines, in the meanwhile confessing that they cannot make locally what their milk is worth. In view of recent improvements in dairy appliances,

ADVANCES MADE IN DAIRY SCIENCE,

there is absolutely little or no necessity to spend dreary hours in endless churning when the butter won't come, and so for the cream, it can be taken off in quick stick. Yet some of us are so wedded to the old ways of keeping in the old plausesome rut which was made by their forefathers. I have had many opportunities of seeing the good effects and the expeditious working of cream separators, and would recommend my friends to give them a fair trial. Recently, at the request of a friend, I was asked to be present at the sale of a herd of Shorthorns, the property of Mr. Bland, of Sheringham, Norfolk. Ledge at the White Hart, the party including D.G.M. W. Orford White, Prov. G.M. C. Hudson, Prov. G.D.M. A. Randall, Prov. G.S.B. Rev. Edgar Ball, A. Meadows, and P.G.'s S. Pollard, F. A. Bales, A. Miller, D. Flowerman, H. Wright, and D. F. Shimpon.

The lodge business transacted, Bro. Johnson (sec.) proposed the health of the Deputy-Grand Master of the Unity (Bro. W. O. White), who in response dealt with several questions of interest to the fraternity, and expressed his pleasure at the continued keeping in the old pleasesome rut which was made by their forefathers. I have had many opportunities of seeing the good effects and the expeditious working of cream separators, and would recommend my friends to give them a fair trial. Recently, at the request of a friend, I was asked to be present at the sale of a herd of Shorthorns, the property of Mr. Bland, of Sheringham, Norfolk. The sale was a very large sum, but it will, nevertheless, be a welcome addition to the Pensions Fund, which was lastly congratulate Prov. G.M. C. Hudson, the hon. sec. and hon. treasurer, D.C.R. W. Barker, and the Committee on this subject, which has been appointed to establish a Hospital Sunday by the Ipswich Societies.

The "Love of Unity" Lodge of I.O.G.T., at Beccles, are intent on keeping pace with the churches. They have just held a harvest festival in the Town Hall, with the Rev. Canon Bell in the chair, and afterwards had the benefit of a lecture from a lady in the person of Mrs. Fisk, G.T. Lecturer. By the sale of the fruit, vegetables, &c., which were brought under the hammer by Mr. G. J. Stanford, the lodge reaped their harvest in the sum of £2 4s. 6d.

East Dereham boasts a flourishing branch of the Independent Order of Rechabites, worked on much the same lines as the Oddfellows and Foresters, with the additional feature that members must be total abstainers. It is worthy of note that, according to the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, the activity of the Temperance societies has increased to the extent of nearly three times as great as that of the other Societies. Striking proof of this statement is to be found in the annual returns, which show that the Rechabites alone registered more new branches during the year than the Temperance societies, Oddfellows, the A.O. Foresters, the Ashton Brothers, and the Orads combined.

The recent friendly society church parade at Clare has been productive of more satisfactory results than even the most sanguine and willing of the promoters anticipated. When the Committee met to open the collection boxes it was found that £3 12s. 6d. had been collected from house to house, while £5 10s. 11½d. was the result of the collection at the door, a total of £14 3s. 6d. It says much for the skilful honorary management that the expenses connected with the undertaking have been kept down to £1 10s., the sum spent in printer's ink; and out of the nett sum of £12 13s. 6d. remaining, £10 has been forwarded to the Addenbrooke's Hospital Fund, and £2 13s. 6d. being deposited in the Postal Savings Bank for future use in behalf of the same cause.

Members of the "Past Grands'" Lodge of Ipswich Oddfellows, by counsel and presence have done much to stimulate the cause of unity and brotherhood in the Ipswich district, the annual meetings of which body of the Past Grands is looked upon as one of the events of the year among the fraternity. Last week proves that the work of the veterans is fully appreciated. Last evening week a number of the Past Grands journeyed to Woodbridge, and were received by the Prov. G.M. Lod

THE DARSHAM DISASTER.

SERIOUS DEVELOPMENT.

MORE CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

PLATELAYER COMMITTED FOR MANSLAUGHTER.

Considerable interest was again manifested in the adjourned inquiry which Mr. Coroner Valliamy conducted at Darsham yesterday, relative to the death of the unfortunate platelayer, George Sharp, of Yoxford, who were killed, on the 13th instant, while riding on a trolley between Darsham and Halesworth. As on the last occasion, the jury deferred their verdict in order to give a platelayer named George Everett, to whose neglect of duty the accident was attributed, to have been called on the opportunity of defending his conduct. Everett, realising his serious position, was legally represented by Mr. W. Marshall, of Ipswich (instructed by Mr. R. C. Mayhew), while Mr. J. Fisher, district superintendent, and Mr. H. Jones, inspector, attended at the Inquest Room on behalf of the G.E.R. Company. At the request of Mr. Marshall, William Mayhew, of Ipswich, the driver of the light engine which was responsible for the disaster, was recalled, but his re-examination failed to shake his previous testimony in any particular. Briefly he stated he had been on the G.E. for 14 years, and on the date of the accident he kept a sharp look out all the way from Darsham to the scene of the disaster, during the course of which he did not see the man Everett in the six foot way (where he alleges he stood), or anyone else to warn him of danger. There was no regulation as to speed at which a light engine should travel, but though he pulled up as soon as possible, he was not going more than 30 or 35 miles an hour at the top of the hill. This speed, however, was increased as he commenced to descend the hill, and when he struck the trolley he was certainly not going at a rate of more than 40 miles an hour. Mr. Marshall pressed the witness as to the distance at which he could see a trolly on the line, but this question was effectually settled in the minds of the Jury when it was pointed out that the driver was

and therefore he might or might not have seen it 100 yards away.—Mr. Holden, the locomotive superintendent of the G.E.R. informed the Jury that running at the rate of 40 miles an hour it would take just over five seconds to cover 100 yards.—Alfred Hammond, a farm labourer was interrogated at length as to what he could see of the men on the trolly from a signal stack in an adjoining field, and he assured the Court that from where he stood he distinctly saw either Everett or another man run up the line after the trolley and engine passed.—A platelayer named David Warne was called to speak to the practice adopted by his gang, of which the deceased man formed a portion. This witness ceased work at noon on the date of the accident, but when asked as to what instructions had been given to Sharp Moore usually gave when working on the Darsham side of the line, he said Moore always told one man to look out. During the 14 years he knew Moore witness found him a very careful man, and he could also say the same with regard to Everett.—Jas. Brookes, a horseman who worked in conjunction with the witness Hammond, was next called, and he expressed the belief that the latter was unable to see the line from where he was working, whereas the Everett coming from the wood towards the gate-house

ACCOMPANIED BY HIS LITTLE CHILD,

immediately after the engine whistled. The child were a white pinafore. No one could fail to see it. Police-superintendent Andrews, struck by the contradictory evidence of the last witness, asked how it was that Brooks on several occasions refused to give similar evidence, telling the constable at the same time that he knew nothing about it? The Coroner did not think this would be evidence, and the question was not pressed.—The next witness named William Andrews, who worked with the last witness at the time of the accident, said the position in which Hammond stood was such that it should be absolutely impossible for him to see the line. Witness, however, saw the trolley pass along the line with three men on it shortly before the engine came along.—Jane Brooks, a girl of 11 years, corroborated the evidence of Brooks; while Mr. D. W. Skeffham, the Halesworth station-master, marshal a conversation between himself and Everett just after the accident, in the course of which Everett told him that the before he could get his red flag out of his pocket; that he was at the time on the down line; that both he and his mate held up their hands and spoke to the engine driver.—The platelayer Everett, after being cautioned by the Coroner, was re-examined by his solicitor, but the latter failed to throw fresh light on the matter except that, after hearing the engine whistle, he ran home with all the speed he could muster. He did not tell the Jury having told the last witness that he was at his crossing when the engine passed him. He did not tell the Jury about his child before because he was afraid of being discharged in consequence.—Mr. Everett, having been fairly re-examined by Mr. Marshall addressed the Jury in Everett's behalf, contending that the evidence adduced that day contained such an element of doubt as to justify them in returning a verdict against Everett. At the same time he admitted that Moore was wrong in putting Everett's boy upon the trolley, but it was hardly probable that Everett would question the conduct of his ganger. Everett had been employed by the G.E.R. Company for 18 years, and had not a black mark against him, and he (Mr. Marshall) appealed to the jury to believe the story of Everett, that he was not asleep on the line in the six-foot and did not hear the engine until it was on him, while a witness 200 yards away both heard and saw the engine. It was for the Jury to say whether Everett's negligence was sufficient to amount to manslaughter.

THE VERDICT.

After a very brief deliberation the Coroner announced that the Jury had returned a verdict of guilty of such gross negligence as amounts to manslaughter, and he would stand committed to the next Assizes. Bail was allowed. Everett will be prosecuted before Mr Baron Worth Magistrates to-day (Saturday), and remanded until Monday.

IMPORTANT STOCK SALE AT FARNHAM.

The important sale of stock, the property of the Hon. W. Iowther, at the Hill Farm, Farnham, offered for sale on Monday, by Mr. Alfred Preston, must be considered one of the best of the season's miscellaneous auctions. The horses were good and well shown by Mr. A. Lewin, the manager. The prices of these were very satisfactory for the times, as the following will show:—Captain, 44g gns., Mr. Grimaldi, London; Prince, 33g gns., Sir B. B. Gurdon; Smiler, 30 gns., Mr. John Gurdon, Burgh; Vivian, 40 gns., Sir W. B. Gurdon; Parshaw Pride, 42g gns., (Col. Bloomfield; Fool and Vivian, 11 gns. Alfred Smith; Mottle, 35 gns., Sir W. B. Gurdon; Queen of Diamonds, 27 gns., Mr. Alfred Smith. Two horses, Scotch and Dayspring, the property of Mr. Lewin, realised 26½ gns. (Mr. R. Pratt), and 26½ gns. (Sir W. B. Gurdon) respectively. Sheep and cattle commanded respectively good prices, the former including Messrs. James Toller, A. Cobbald, and W. Eastaugh.

BAZAAR AND RUMMAGE SALE AT EYE.

IMPROVEMENTS AT THE SCHOOL.

When Mr. H. P. Henderson, one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools, visited Eye last March for the purpose of holding his annual examination of the scholars, he made a number of suggestions with regard to matters which it was necessary to carry out on the school premises. At the same time he said he should be quite satisfied if the work was completed within two years. The Rev. Stopford W. Brooke, of whom the vicar, the Rev. A. J. Spencer, a gentleman who has taken the keenest possible interest in all educational affairs of the parishes in which he has laboured—as chairman he did not think it worth while to call a meeting of the managers," resolved that the work should be done at once. Consequently a number of bricklayers, carpenters, painters, &c., were busily engaged during the week during the Harvest holidays, with the result that the Eye National School buildings, whether taken as a whole or in detail, will now bear comparison with any in the county, and it is satisfactory to be able to add that this fact has been admitted by the Inspector himself, who paid a surprise visit to the premises on the other day. The total cost of the work carried out amounted to over £70, and the managers have been unable how best to raise the sum by voluntary efforts. At length the popular plan of holding a bazaar and rummage sale was unanimously decided upon, and on Tuesday Mrs. Spencer last their head at once set to work to collect articles. The cheerfully responded to invitations for contributions, a number of which were sent at the sale which took place on Thursday, when the Mayor of Eye (Mr. Hammond) was present, and the case of municipal buildings at the disposal of the Committee. The Corn Exchange where the principal business of the day was transacted, had been made gay with bunting. And from first to last an air of activity and liveliness pervaded the whole scene. A charming flower and fruit stall, furnished entirely by Lady Catchpole, was presided over by the Hon. Rasmond, and the Hon. Desiree Rasmond, assisted by Miss Bond and Miss Miller. The fancy stalls was in charge of Mrs. Barnes, Miss Eaglebeart, Miss E. Woolnough, and Miss Woolnough, assisted by Miss A. Mac-Millar. The fancy stalls was in charge of Mrs. Barnes, Miss Eaglebeart, Miss E. Woolnough, and Miss Woolnough, assisted by Miss A. Mac-Millar. A stall containing a variety of useful articles was in charge of Miss Bingley and Miss Maude Peck. Mrs. J. Peck, Mrs. Bishopp, and Miss Bishopp did good business at the principal rummage stall, whilst Mrs. Hammond and Mr. Hunt successfully managed

AN EVERLOW REFRESHMENT TENT.

A provision department, containing numerous specimens of farm produce, contributed by farmers of the parish, was in the hands of Mrs. Godsey, Mrs. Woods, Mrs. H. Rand, sen., Mrs. Harper, and Mrs. Grouard, whilst a well-furnished refreshment was managed by Mrs. Cullum, Mrs. E. H. Peck, and the Misses Cullum. Mrs. Wiltshire, as Gipsy Queen had a pipe and a weighing machine was in charge of Mr. Thos. Woods; the "Fine Art Gallery" was superintended by the Rev. W. H. Chambers, and Mr. H. Godsey, jun. Vocal and instrumental concerts were given at intervals, those assisting including the Misses Peck, Miss Gage, Mr. Hudson, Miss Hammond, Miss Warne, Miss Marsh, Mr. Chevallier, Mr. H. F. Woolnough, Mr. H. Skuffham, Master Harry Hayward, &c., and the duties of accompanyist were agreeably varied by the capital performances of Mr. A. Goodenham's quadrille band. The venture realised over £72.

FRAMLINGHAM VOLUNTEERS' PRIZE FUND.—A very successful concert was given in the Corn Hall, Framlingham, on Wednesday evening, in aid of the Volunteer (D Company's) prize fund. Miss E. Dickson was the accompanist, and the programme was a varied one.—The band, Mr. J. E. Grievson, Miss Drew, Mr. G. A. Wright, Miss E. Copson, Mr. A. Pretty, Sergt. F. Christian (2nd Scots Guards), and Mr. A. F. Towle.

SMOTHERED IN MUD.

George Bamborough, aged about 50, chief engineer of the steamship Advent, of Sunderland, was missing from his ship lying at Beadle Brothers' new wharf, Keith and his body has since been found at low tide embedded in the mud between the vessel and the quay, only one of his boots sticking out.

ALLEGED PERJURY AT MISTLEY.

SEQUEL TO MAGISTERIAL PROCEEDINGS.

At the close of the Mistley Sessions on Monday, Mr. Self, of Harwich, desired to make a denial on oath of an allegation which a witness made against him a fortnight since, but after some conversation with the Clerk, he applied for, and was granted, a summons alleging perjury by one Daniel Edwards.

FIENDISH CONDUCT OF A GARDENER.

BURNING A CAT ALIVE.

Charles Toone, a gardener, was fined in a London Police Court 30s. 6d. for revolting cruelty to a cat. It was shown that he stunned the cat by striking it on the head, and then, just as it was recovering, burned it alive.

SHOCKING SCENE IN A HOSPITAL.

A MANIAC'S TERRIBLE ASSAULT.

There was an exciting scene in the Stanley Hospital, Holyhead, on Monday. One of the inmates suddenly became deranged. Without warning he struck the matron. Miss Wilkes endeavoured to escape, and rushed out of the building. She was pursued by the maniac, who succeeded in overtaking and brutally injuring her. She was finally rescued, and is now in a critical condition.

AN ARDLEIGH LICENSE ENDORSED.

DRINKING AFTER HOURS.

At Mistley Petty Sessions on Monday, Thomas Parker, landlord of the Trowel and Hammer Inn, Ardleigh, was summoned for keeping his house open during prohibited hours on Sunday, September 2nd, and John Vince was charged with being on the premises.—Inspector Terry said he found Vince in the kitchen ten minutes past eleven drinking some porter. Defendants pleaded guilty, and Parker was fined £1, and costs 10s. 6d., and Vince was endorsed, and Vince was fined 10s., and costs 10s. 6d.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM IN ESSEX.

A POST OFFICE WRECKED.

A thunderstorm, accompanied by a deluge of rain, passed over Maldon, Essex, and the district, on Monday morning. At the adjoining village of Woodham, owing to the tremendous quantity of water, the village brook became a torrent and forced its way into many of the cottages and the local post-office, bursting in the doors and wrecking the interior. In one instance the whole side of a cottage was swept away. In some houses the water rose to a depth of six feet.

YARMOUTH BOY'S SAD END.

CRUSHED TO DEATH WHILE FISHING.

On Monday the Yarmouth Coroner held an inquest at Gorleston Cottage Hospital, touching the death of Philip Mayston, a boy of nine, son of Police-constable Mayston. The evidence showed that deceased, on Saturday afternoon, was fishing with a friend William Andrews, who worked with the last witness at the time of the accident, said the position in which Hammond stood was such that it should be absolutely impossible for him to see the line. Witness, however, saw the trolley pass along the line with three men on it shortly before the engine came along.—Jane Brooks, a girl of 11 years, corroborated the evidence of Brooks; while Mr. D. W. Skeffham, the Halesworth station-master, marshal a conversation between himself and Everett just after the accident, in the course of which Everett told him that the

After a very brief deliberation the Coroner announced that the Jury had returned a verdict of guilty of such gross negligence as amounts to manslaughter, and he would stand committed to the next Assizes. Bail was allowed. Everett will be prosecuted before Mr Baron Worth Magistrates to-day (Saturday), and remanded until Monday.

IPSWICH BOROUGH REGISTERS.

750 NEW CLAIMS.

At the Revision Court for the borough of Ipswich on Monday, it was stated that the number of claims totalled the unusually large number of 750. These, however, by arrangement with the party agents, had been reduced to about 300. There were about 370 objections, and these had been decreased to about a dozen.

WOODBRIDGE BOARD OF GUARDIANS.

At the weekly meeting of the Woodbridge Board of Guardians on Thursday, Mr. W. P. T. Phillips presiding, tenders were accepted by the Board for the ensuing three months:—Meat, Mr. Clifford (District 1d per stone, Colneis and Wilford Districts, 10d. per stone), Mr. A. Read, Woodbridge; bread, 5d. per 4-lb. cwt., Mr. Geo. Bloomfield, Melton's Street, Ipswich; drapery, Mr. G. T. Pick, Ipswich; clothing, Eastern Counties Co-operative Association, Ipswich; meal, Mr. Geo. Dunnett, Norwich Road, Ipswich; boots and shoes, Mr. John Reeve, Bredfield; coffins, Mr. John Andrews, Woodbridge; grocery, Mr. John Andrews, Woodbridge; parafin oil, 6d. per gallon, Mr. W. Ward, Ipswich; ale, beer and porter, Mr. Edward Smith, Melton; mates meal, stray &c., Mr. H. Hancox, Nacton.

FIRE AT LYNN DOCK.

VALUABLE HORSE SUFFOCATED.

On Monday night a fire occurred upon the premises of Mr. G. J. Barnard, coal, coke, and salt merchant, Alexandra Dock, Lynn. The premises, which covered an area of 100 ft. by 70 ft., were constructed of wood and corrugated iron, and in the yard was stored about 70 tons of coal. Near out of the fire were some loose stables were rescued, and the fifth, Emperor, an entire, which Mr. Barnard purchased of Mr. Cole Ambrose, at Ellough, for £105 11s. two years ago, which could not be got at, succumbed either to the suffocating smoke or to the flames. Mr. Barnard was only partly covered by insurance. The loss will be great. The cause of the outbreak is unknown.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION AT NACTON.

APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE.

In conformity with the regulations of the East Suffolk County Council, a meeting was held in Nacton Schoolroom on Wednesday evening to appoint a local committee to carry on technical instruction for the division. Captain Pretyman presided. The ladies were represented by Mrs. Meisterschaft, who has done much in past years to promote the success of the various classes. The Hon. Mrs. Pretyman was elected, as were also Messrs. Thomas and Wright, to form the old Committee in their deliberations. A continuation class under Mr. R. Bowyer Fankinson in sanitation and health and mensuration for Nacton were the subjects chosen.

RESULT OF FORGETTING A CORNET.

A PETTISTREE PUBLICAN FINED.

On Wednesday, before the Woodbridge Bench, Richard Martin, innkeeper, Pettistree, was charged with keeping his house (the Three Tuns Inn) open during prohibited hours, on September 16th. Police-constable Wilson proved the case, and for the defence Martin said that Wright came round on Sunday afternoon for a part of a cornet which he had left in the house the previous evening. The Bench fined defendant, and fined him £1 and 7s. 6d. costs, and ordered the conviction to be endorsed on the license. — George Wright, Pettistree, Woodbridge, was also charged with being on the premises during prohibited hours, pleaded guilty and was fined 10s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. costs, or seven days' imprisonment.

IPSWICH INDEPENDENT FEDERATION.

FORMATION OF A BRANCH AT HULL.

We note from the Hull Mail that as an outcome of a further visit of Mr. A. L. Edwards, president of the Ipswich Mutual Working Men's Independent Federation, to the town of Hull, a new branch of the Federation has been formed in that town, over 50 names being enrolled at the meeting. The officers elected were:—Mr. Geo. Sunderland, chairman; Mr. J. H. Cummings, secretary; and Mr. Lamplough, treasurer. During the same week Mr. Edwards addressed two large meetings at Grimsby and Grimsby, and here, too, a large accession to the membership is reported.—On Wednesday evening a numerously attended and successful meeting was held at
